LAW VS. PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

The question is renewed in the crack of the pistol every now and then in the hands of some avenger of woman's honor, whether our laws are sufficient to maintain the rights of the weaker vessel? We remarked a few days ago, in referring to the case of McDonald and Mish, upon the fact that no man had for many years been punished for avenging the outraged honor of a wife, mother or daughter; that there is a chivalrous sentiment indwelling in the hearts of men that refuses to condemn such infraction of society's laws, and thereby justifies and advises it, and from this result its sentiment society cannot escape. Since then there has been given new testimony in the direction of this truth, and in our own community a sentiment is just now manifested of this order, growing out of a Sunday night murder. Society never can afford to make man or woman the judge and trier of his or her own wrong, or appoint them in their own manner to right it or mete out punishment. When it does that it abandons all order, delegates to passion and the avenging spirit the administration of the most terrible of criminal laws. The taking of human life, except as excused by the written laws, is murder, and society can never afford to otherwise define the killing of a human being. But cases frequently occur in which society arises in rebellion against its own written codes, and practically overthrows them. Who believes, in the light of the history of criminal experience in the past twenty-five or thirty years in America, that any wronged husband will ever be punished in the codes direct for taking the law into his own hands? The laws can be written to the level of public consent, they cannot always be written to the level of public sentiment, or the diseases of the public mind. Or perhaps better phrasing would be that the public sentiment, which may be a disease of the public mind, cannot always be brought to a level with the even and exact justice of the written law, for there can be no excuse of murder. It remains murder, however successfully mortified or cool public sympathy may intervene to prevent its punishment. Men and women will admit this; there will be found not one to deny it; and yet men and women composing society will deny their profession day in and day out by condoning the offense, where the chivalrous sentiment intercedes to excuse it. It is a sociological study that will continue to deeply engage the thought of the well-wishers of the race why this is a fact. Is it due to the conviction that our laws are inadequate; that the law is unequal to the task of defending the sanctity of the nuptial couch; that the purity and honor of woman have not ample safeguards in the provisions of the law; that the methods of administering the law are uncertain, halting and treacherous? Is it possible that here is the point at which society frankly confesses that it is incapable of self-government according to written codes? that here is the point at which it is forced to the confession that the resort to the method of the barbarian is all that is left for it? Whatever the answer we may give, whatever the reasoning from cause to effect, whatever the cold logic of the social syllism, it remains that society is in just that condition between law and lawlessness in its sympathy in all cases where female honor is avenged, that amounts to an admission of want of confidence in the law to protect it. Or shall we rather set the upon this statement, that the refinement of the social code regarding women rises superior to the written law and records a decree of society corresponding with the chivalrous sentiment which invests the outraged avenger of female honor with the armor of public approval? But, under either statement, the fact remains that there is a kind of murder against which society lifts one hand in punishment and the other to shield the offender from the blow.

GENERAL LOGAN FEARFUL.

General Logan, through the medium of his will, has put his hand to declarations that will bring upon him the charge that he waves the "bloody shirt." In his new book he insists that the Republicans of the country have not yet reached that period in history when they can afford to forget the past of the rebellion. He goes so far as to say, that were Lincoln here today, he would open his eyes in amazement to see how many of the legitimate fruits of the Union victories have been filched from us. It is fortunate for the author that contemporaneously with the issuance of his book, an ex-rebel General in the Congress of the United States, and protected by its broad mantle, should assuage the memory of the patriotic Standard, that at the same time counsel should be urging the Committee on War Claims to report a bill for the payment of the losses of rebels on cotton destroyed "by necessity of war," and for the redemption of bonds issued by the late Southern Confederacy. These two facts will go a long way to confirm the public in the belief that General Logan has some cause for his unwillingness to forgive, however ready he may be to forgive. He claims that the negro of the South has not as yet been wholly freed, that a system of peonage has superseded that of slavery; that patriots are driven to take back seats, while unrepentant rebels come to the front; that the solidity of the South is secured by a system of terrorism, and therefore such states have not a republican form of government in the full and true sense, and that this solid South is able to dictate today the policy of the country. This means, he says, the domination of the nation presently by the same old influences that denied the power of the Government to prevent the disruption of the Union. To him, the conclusion of the whole matter, the General believes that the same forces that sought the severance of the Union by war and failed, have hope of accomplishing their desires within the Union, and peaceably. The General will not be denied the credit of courageous utterance. He incriminated Brown as being succeeded by Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina.

TOMMY BROWN "AT HOME."

The Stage Robber Could not Hoodwink Sheriff Ben Thorn.

Tommy Brown, the highwayman who escaped from Folsom Prison, is again beneath the roof of his old home, where he will now have to stay eight years and three months instead of twenty-two months this time he had to serve his term. Brown was convicted to Folsom by Sheriff Ben Thorn, of Calaveras, the prisoner gave a brief account of his adventures by a raid on a Chinese cabin, and by a pitiful story he told to a man who was a member of the capture. During the night he emerged from his hiding-place in the rocks, and pierced the circle of guards who were scouring the country around the prison. By climbing the rocks, he made his way to the Comstock, and there he obtained a change of apparel by a raid on a Chinese cabin, and by a pitiful story he told to a man who was a member of the capture. San Francisco Money Market.
SAN FRANCISCO, June 29th.—Following is a statement of the loans recorded on city mortgages during the past week:

Lender	Amount
Bank	$1,250
French Bank	1,180
German Bank	7
S. P. San Fran. Union	2,050
and Loan	3
Miscellaneous	4
TOTALS.	$87,109

This is the smallest weekly aggregate in some time. All the above loans were at 6 1/2 per cent. Commercial paper is dis counted 5 1/2, and that of the Bank at 7. Money on call is very low, provided the security is first class and satisfactory to the lender. A considerable amount of paper has been offered for discount at 2 per cent., and 1 1/2 per cent. per month, the latter the usual United States and other equally good bonds as collateral.
Exchange is quiet. Bar silver and Mexi can dollars are dull.

Three Years for Embazement.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 29th.—H. C. Morris, was of the San Francisco Bar, was sentenced to imprisonment in the House of Correction for a term of three years. July 1855, Marks, who was then employed in the land office of the Central Pacific Railroad, was imprisoned $3000, and paid to Mrs. Eleanor Willard, a dressmaker, with which he was to purchase some land for her. In his de fense Marks attacked the chastity of the complainant, and claimed that he was not the author of the offense. In the Court he was found guilty and sentenced to three years imprisonment.

Execution at Stockton.

STOCKTON, June 29th.—Uza Finley French, who murdered Peter Wells at Olema, Amador county, March 14, 1884, was hanged here this afternoon at 1 P. M.

French was a Catholic priest, and admitted the facts to the defense. He was to be hanged at 9 o'clock this morning the last of the trials of the condemned. The Court, however, adjourned the trials to a later date, and French was released on bail.

He ate and smoked this morning and was cheerful to the last, but regretted that he could not be hanged at once.

He had a neck brace, and nothing to say on the scaffold. The drop broke his neck and there was no struggle.
He was buried immediately from St. Mary's Church.

Body Found.

MAYFIELD, June 29th.—Joseph Swall, an employee on the Palo Alto ranch, while reaping barley on the Liebre tract yesterday, ran into the horribly decomposed remains of a man. Only a woolen shirt was found on the body, which was buried in a grave. The body was identified as that of the brother-in-law of S. Leonardi, who wandered away from his home with nothing but a shirt on several months ago, and, notwithstanding the diligent search, was never found.

demand not be complied with, then we will grant you the same rights, by which we you should have the right to lock out all Union men. If it were not for the fact that you would be most ready to yield to a settlement, except by a frank with drawal of your demand. Yours truly,
